

New income guidelines take effect with your July coverage

Each spring, the federal government publishes new income guidelines. These guidelines are used to determine eligibility and monthly premiums for Basic Health. Because of these new guidelines, your bill for July coverage may show a new monthly premium.

Any time your income or family size changes, Basic Health will determine whether it changes your "income band," as shown on the table below. If you move to a different income band, your premium will change. Be sure to tell Basic Health about any changes to your income or family size whenever they happen.

What is the “real” cost of Basic Health coverage?

Health care can be expensive. That's why Basic Health offers reduced-premium coverage to people across Washington state.

As a Basic Health member, you pay a part of the actual cost of your coverage; the rest is paid by the state. A set amount is paid to each health plan; the part you pay depends on the health plan you choose, the county where you live, number and ages of family members, and income.

Each month, we send payment to the health plan you've chosen for your coverage. The amount we pay to the health plan includes the amount you pay to Basic Health (your monthly premium) plus the amount paid by the state (the premium subsidy). The average amount Basic Health pays to the health plans each month for coverage of a 40-year-old member is $218.03. If that member pays a $17 monthly premium, the state pays the difference of $201.03 each month toward the actual cost of the coverage. On average, the state pays about 82 percent of the total amount paid to the health plan for each member.

Together with you, we're working to keep your family healthy, and to make the most of our state's investment in your health.

Recertification 101

At least once a year, Basic Health will check to make sure you still qualify for the program, and what your monthly premium will be. To do this, we will ask you for current pay stubs and a copy of your IRS Form 1040 (including all schedules) for the most recent tax year. We will also ask for proof that you are a Washington State resident.

You are required to return this information to us. We will use it to make sure you are still eligible for Basic Health. This process is called "recertification"; you will receive detailed instructions when your account is selected for the process.

Providing false information

It is important that any information you provide to Basic Health is accurate and timely. Do not report false information or withhold information required for your Basic Health membership.

If you do, Basic Health can require you to pay up to two times the amount the state paid for your coverage (see article above). You can also be disenrolled from Basic Health, prosecuted, and billed for any medical services you received.

This serves as official notice of a change to your 2007 Basic Health Member Handbook.
